ruby gems. "The wine cellars are one of our specialties," says Haniacek. Seeing the meticulous care that goes into this basement of burgundy, it's easy to believe him.

Now while this residence--with its glazed limestone fireplace, two-story silk drapery, scraped wood, tinted stucco dormers, and dusty wine bottles,--offers a nifty escape from the modern day, sometimes it's nice to know a house can compete with its peers from this century. For that, look no further than the abundance of smart technology that Mancari and Associates has put in place, starting in the gorgeous, amber-hued home movie theater. Razor-sharp picture and hair-raising surround-sound send film viewers reeling deep into the comfort of their plump brown leather chairs. And if that's not enough of a jolt back to the present day, perhaps the fact that the entire house is wired for remote access will be. "Everything is run off a touch-screen pad," says Haniacek. "One that can be reached from inside or outside the house." This means that a client could be on a business trip in Japan and still access documents on a home computer, watch a favorite TV show or set a security alarm.
